

I simply believe that we do not have enough competition as it is. Sure there are small carriers but who actually goes with them if they plan to travel a decent bit. So that leaves the big four. But now we are talking about making 1 gigantic mobile carrier (AT&T 150 Million +/-), 1 very large carrier (Verizon 100 Million +/-), and 1 large carrier (Sprint 50 Million +/-). This will leave Sprint in a very bad position and they will either have the capital to spend enough to start competing with Verizon and try to level the playing field or they will slowly start to decline leaving only two large carriers. Its just common sense.

I could take the time to elaborate and give specifics but I am sure others are making charts and spreadsheets that spell it all out so lets just say I am VERY against it for about 50 different reasons.